Kerry Walker was attacked by an assailant, then he was arrested as the perpetrator, and then the government tampered with evidence to try to manufacture guilt, while allowing the assailant walk free with impunity.

Does this sound like the workings of a fiction novel? It sure does but unfortunately it is the truth.

Jeff Rusbridge, Dyer & Rusbridge, P.C., was Kerry Walker's first lawyer in this case. He then became a witness in Walker's case after the State of Georgia tampered with the evidence.

Rusbridge stated to Cherokee County employee Barbara Jacoby, "Unfortunately, the justice system currently allows for bad, unjustified cases to proceed all the way to the eve of trial, and some proceed to trial. In this case, if the State had not tampered with a key piece of evidence in the case, this would probably be one of the bad cases that made it to trial. Instead, even after the State's misconduct was brought to light, the case languished for years, while Kerry's life wasted away. Numerous criminal defendants face similar circumstances, but you often don't hear about it because they lack the means to make it public, or because the system is slanted in favor of the government."

I have reviewed Kerry Walker's entire case over time and have even supported him by adding his case to my website (see http://www.patrickcrusade.org/Kerry\_Walker.html) for Internet surfers to find.

What the judicial system in the State of Georgia did to Kerry Walker should be remedied. There is no excuse for tampering with evidence. There is no reason to attempt to pin guilt on an innocent person while allowing the real perpetrator to walk free. It boggles the mind to know that this kind of thing goes on in America, the so-called "land of the free and home of the brave." Kerry Walker is not free and members of the State of Georgia who have tampered with evidence are not brave.

Kerry Walker will prove that the state of Georgia has committed a felony crime against him in a court of law by a jury trial. We anticipate his success with flying colors, and we anticipate that the remedy shall make him monetarily, emotionally and spiritually whole again and more so.

Sincerely,

Sherry Swiney
Director
